Ms. Lee's life is not free of misfortune. Recently she found herself asking people to repeat what they had said, and realized that her hearing was failing. When she was 88, she kept turning her ankle and falling, due to nerve damage in her spine. Characteristically, however, she treats these hardships as minor inconveniences. "Deafness is not a bad handicap," she said. "At night when I remove my hearing aids, the silence is delicious." She obtained a brace for her leg and now, with the help of a cane, is as mobile as ever. She regularly takes buses around Taipei, and she frequently travels outside the city to visit friends and family. Her personal philosophy is that you should always look on the bright side and never brood about anything for more than 20 minutes.

- Ms. Lee kept turning her ankle and falling, because
(a) she was very old.
(b) she suffered nerve injury
(c) she obtained a brace for her leg.
(d) she removed her hearing aids.
- Ms. Lee regards her deafness
(a) as something that has permanently disabled her.
(b) as a means to ask for help.
(c) as something that enables her to enjoy silence
(d) as a major inconvenience.

If we are trying to change an affectively based attitude, it is best to fight emotions with emotions. Many advertisements take the emotional approach – for example, ads for different brands of soft drinks. Given that different brands of colas are not all that different, many people do not base their purchasing decisions on the objective qualities of the different brands. Instead of presenting facts, soda ads play to people's emotions, trying to associate feelings of excitement, youth, energy, and sexual attractiveness with their brand.

15. Soda ads work by
(a) stressing objective qualities.
(b) capitalizing on people's feelings.
(c) fighting with one another.
(d) using logical arguments.

16. How can we change an affectively based attitude?
(a) By using logical arguments.
(b) By using arguments that are based on effects.
(c) By engaging people's emotions.
(d) By fighting against people's emotions.

17. Why do soda ads associate feelings of excitement, youth, energy, and sexual attractiveness with their brand?
(a) Because they try to present facts.
(b) Because they try to make people excited, young, energetic, and sexually attractive.
(c) Because they try to make fun of people's emotions.
(d) Because they try to arouse certain emotions.

18. According to the passage, which statement is true?
(a) Soda ads do not stress facts.
(b) Soda ads usually take the logical approach.
(c) People use different approaches when they purchase different brands of soft drinks.
(d) People consider objective qualities when they purchase soft drinks.
